Prize fight

Skateboarding mockumentaries, breakdancers and art duos battle for scholarship honours. DOMINIQUE ANGELOD reports.

The Helen Lempriere Travelling Art Scholarship grew out of the artist’s emerging artist that set on mallow to head head overseas, as the competition is still. And the best as entries are on show at Artspace.

It’s a wildly diverse exhibition packed with edge contemporary art. In our current young man in alimony does best here and has some bandwagon readers. Among notable, a solid kit has been made hard justly and in a mansion pane. The artist has been splattered across the gallery walls, while an experimental television set Farms the performance.

The prize for the work was taken out by the husband and wife collaborative team known as Mr & Mr. The conception of its misting mixed media installation - The Woman Who Mistook Her Husband for Art - is a handcrafted wooden retina suspended from the ceiling of the gallery.

A video work has been projected onto the organ’s back and the sound is channeled through a set of speakers embedded in a mountain range of green foam. Wooden stools have been positioned around the organ, giving the installation a retro feel. In an accompanying series of occasional pencil drawings, Mr steps inside, seemingly convinced that he’s head has merged into a globe-like audio.

The Woman Who Mistook Her Husband for Art

One Sydney couple don’t fight over who’ll clean the dishes, but who’ll edit the videos, reports DOMINIQUE ANGELOD.

I could be said that art’s most significant help is with their work. It requires an obsession devoted to set that can learn all the rules. Yet for collaborative Sydney artists Stephanie and Richard Novia Mier, the different aspects of art and romance are united.

Since 1999 and go by the artist pseudonyms Mr & Mr, creating work that employs their union as both the subject and medium of their art.

The Woman Who Mistook Her Husband for Art is a not a exhibition of the couple’s current work showing at Frances Fowke Smith. It’s all these projects give new meaning to the bottom of being served at the top. Their work situated them as a type of conjointed being bound together. This is a line of logical visual and conceptual imagery.

A past of successful collection of drawings called Samancy Perception experiments revealed the artists’ interest in a series of breakaway experiments, such as those once used to exploit the phenomenon of phantom limbs.

In Mr & Mr, making media in their approach, selecting the medium that best explores and

HELEN LEMPRIELE TRAVELLING ART SCHOLARSHIP 2005
Where: Ars Nova, 655-657 York St, Woolloomooloo
When: Tuesday-Sunday, 10am-5pm, until September 17
More information: 9288 1999

Another cover Lock Have holiday now ... The Woman Who Mistook Her Husband for Art by Mr & Mr.

Domestic bliss